After monitoring a product's development after the first three releases, the product owner wants to launch a product even though it lacks some features identified in the minimum viable product (MVP). A stakeholder is not satisfied with this version and feels it needs to meet the previously agreed-upon MVP definition.

How should the project manager proceed?

- A. Review the positives and negatives of releasing the product in its current format and bring this analysis to the project sponsor to decide.
- B. Work with the stakeholder and the product owner to try and find alignment but support the product owner as they are ultimately responsible for the product.
- C. Schedule a meeting with all stakeholders and the product owner to review the project's Pareto Chart.
- D. Empower the project team to decide how to proceed as the product's development is the project team's responsibility.

Question of the Day

Can you answer PMI Study Hall's QUESTION OF THE DAY?

Question:

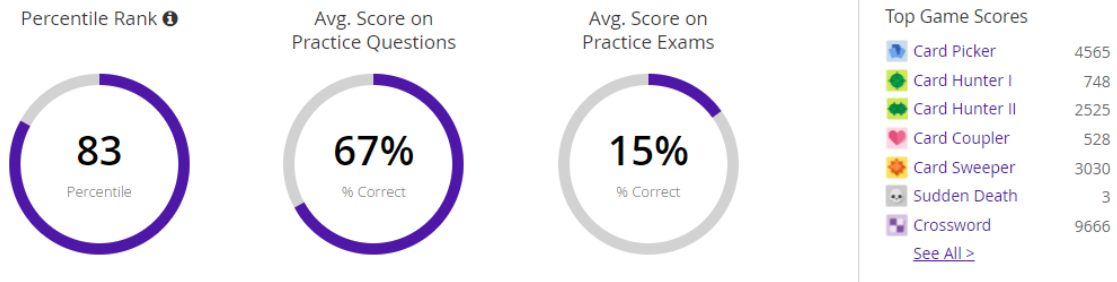

A project team uses the influence/commitment matrix to identify key stakeholders and prioritize them for specific action planning. For a specific group, the project team plans to keep them informed and feed them with any "early win" good news about the project.

In which quadrant of the matrix are they located?

- A. Low Influence / Low Commitment
- B. Low Influence / High Commitment
- C. High Influence / Low Commitment
- D. High Influence / High Commitment

As you complete activities in PMI Study Hall™, you will achieve milestones that will unlock Question of the Day emails. You will receive these daily, for 1-3 months (depending on your plan), to review and brush up on your exam knowledge.

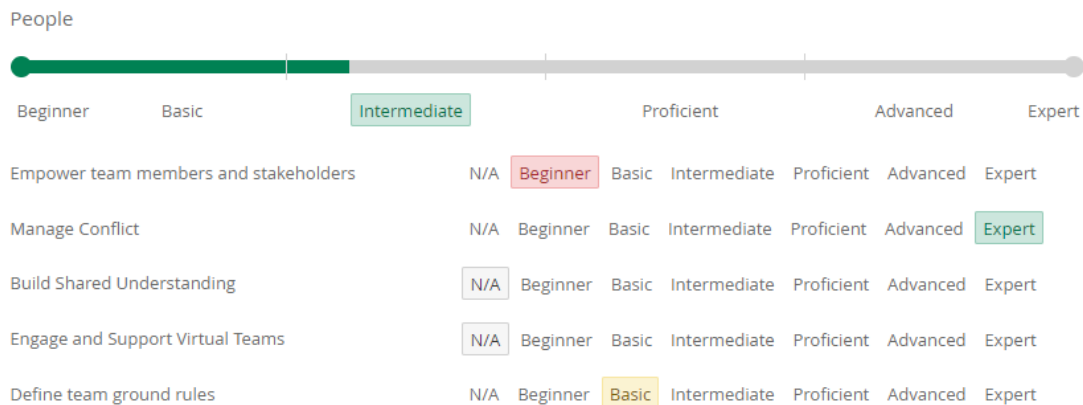

Score Reports

As you complete practice questions and exams, you will see your average score percentage and overall percentile ranking, relative to other users, on the Home page dashboard. You will also see your Top Game Scores to gauge your activity performance. Be sure to play multiple games, multiple times, and aim to beat your high score.

Please note that your scores on Study Hall cannot predict your performance on the official exam. However, most users that consistently score 60% and above on practice questions and exams have been successful. Stay motivated and encouraged – you can do it!

Strengths and Weaknesses

On the Home page dashboard, you will find your Strengths and Weaknesses breakdown for every practice question category, calculated by your practice results relative to other users. Complete all questions diligently and improve your skills from beginner to expert as you hone your strengths and target your weaknesses.
