The Evolving PMO: Governance, Portfolio Management, Resource Optimization, and Performance Measurement

Instructor(s): Eric Foss

Length: 4 days

Pework: none

CEUs: 2.8/see below for PDU breakdown

Level: Advanced

Training Topic: Strategic Planning and Implementation

Subtopics: PMO, Governance

Training Description:

Turn your project management office (PMO) from lackluster to brilliant and performing at the highest levels. A decade ago, Kent Crawford created the term “project office” in his first book, The Strategic Project Office. Since then, the project office has changed and evolved in dramatic ways as thousands of organizations have implemented this cultural remake to create “projectized” organizations. Today's successful PMOs are being replicated across other organizational business units and many are rapidly evolving into enterprise PMOs.

Through decades of working with corporate leadership, the training instructor will interweave the latest concepts of governance, portfolio management, resource optimization, and organizational performance measurement to help learners understand how to evolve the project office into a highly valued demand management office. This training is especially useful for those preparing to implement a PMO or expanding their existing project office to incorporate organizational demand planning and management.

Learning Objectives:

Upon completion of this training, learners will be able to:

- Define best practices for PMOs, enterprise PMOs, and their requirements to manage demand.
- Describe governance: Building the organizational model, culture, and structure of your PMO.
- Apply portfolio management and the seven steps to strategy execution.
- Demonstrate resource optimization: Understanding program and project utilization while integrating operations, support, and maintenance.
