Catapult Your Leadership Capabilities Using Agile Principles

Instructor(s): Steven Martin

Length: 2 days

Pework: None

CEUs: 1.4/see below for PDU breakdown

Level: Intermediate

Training Topic: Leadership Development

Subtopics: Resource Management, Agile

Training Description:

With self-organization and self-management as core concepts for agile-run projects, it's no wonder there is confusion with the role of a project manager, portfolio manager, or project management office (PMO). Agile frameworks typically provide no guidance to people who have had leadership responsibilities, even though leaders have a critical role for project success. Understanding how to operate effectively as a leader in agile not only helps teams better deliver, but also enables the organization to adopt and apply agile concepts more smoothly. This drives longer-lasting benefits and greater project success.

Through hands-on exercises, group learning sessions, and a case study from an actual large-scale software project, learners will understand how they and their teams could be working better by applying agile principles. Learn how to adjust your actions as a leader to help create the right conditions for higher-impact projects with less churn and stress. Furthermore, concepts learned will also enable agility to take greater hold both within your teams and across the organization.

Learning Objectives:

Upon completion of this training, learners will be able to:

- Recap core agile and Scrum concepts to help set a stage for leadership discussions.
- Discover how leadership and managing projects changes in adaptive and hybrid organizations.
- Learn the importance of seven agile leadership principles and explore how they apply to projects.
- Determine an action plan for what they should do differently as a project manager, portfolio manager, or leader of their PMO.
